Are you reading "Georgiana Ganson?" and a thousand other new attractions. If so, you probably discovered that chapter III was considerably mixed. The mistake was made in "making up" the columns for the press; we republish the same in its proper form, in this week's issue, and promise to do better in the future. Back numbers of the Times, containing the preceeding chapters of this interesting story, can be had at this office.

The lawn social at Mr. C. E. Shattuck's residence, last Friday evening, was one of the pleasantest of the season. The house and grounds were brilliantly lighted and thronged with guests. The loudest feature of the evening was the side show, owned and managed by Messrs. C. A. Town and S. E. Parkill. A panoramic view illustratingthis highly moral and intellectual show, posted in a conspicuous place, together with the vehement vociferations of the door-keeper, made the out side-show so highly interesting that it was better patronized than the in side-show. Much credit is due to Mr. Shattuck and family and all parties assisting in this pleasant evening's entertainment.
